It is therefore entirely understandable that you are excited about a date with her and are eager to see her. But if, on the other hand, you are 46-years-old and she is 31, it's reasonable to expect that the two of you might have more in common than just your birthday. In order to find out if that is indeed the case, you can use the simple filter capabilities of OkCupid.Report: 5.5' apps can function on smaller screens An app that's 5.5 inches wide can function on small screens that are smaller than 5.5 inches. On January 3, Google's Android Developer Evangelist Mike Gorman tweeted that websites and apps up to 5.5 inches wide can function on Android phones with screen widths under 5.5 inches. Gorman claimed the display doesn't have to be large to work with apps that are that wide: Note: this only applies for apps that have a horizontal scroll bar and the scroll bar isn't visible to the user, but the app is 5.5 inches wide. That's more than a enough size for a 4" screen. Additionally, if it's an Android phone that supports multiple columns, an app can go wider than its screen width if the app can scroll on its own. We could speculate that Google made a big commitment to supporting smaller phones when they split Android into two versions. An Android phone that runs on a One Plus 5 or any of the Galaxy A smartphones can function as a tablet. All the current flagships such as the Samsung Galaxy S7, Google Pixel, HTC 10, and others could qualify as basic phones. Responses to Gorman's tweet range from disbelief to praise.
