Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a transmission image stabilizing technology for stabilizing a transmission image. 2. Description of the Related Art Hitherto, in a video camera using an image sensor, a technique for stabilizing images has been researched and developed. As the image stabilizing technology, a method of enlarging an angle of a lens so as to shake of an image by a shaky hand or a method of enlarging a swing angle of an image sensor so as to shake the image by a shaky hand have been proposed. However, the method enlarging the angle of the lens has a limit in the stabilization of the image, because it is difficult to enlarge the angle of the lens by a miniaturization of a lens, so that an angle of a shake error of the image becomes large. Moreover, in the method enlarging the swing angle of the image sensor, a rotating angle of the image sensor becomes large, so that it takes a long time to drive a stabilized image because the time period for reading an image is longer. 8,258; urban white women \>25 kg/m^2^: 111,655). Field of Invention This invention relates to the production of zeolitic molecular sieve materials by synthesis in clay at substantially normal pH conditions. The synthesis is performed in the ence of a clay interlayer for maintaining the preferred synthesis at a pH near neutrality. 2. Discussion of Prior Art To be classified as a molecular sieve, a crystalline zeolite material must lay an internal structure with uniform pore openings through which both the native and hydrocarbon molecules can enter and be adsorbed. It is well known by those skilled in the zeolite hat the pore openings of the crystalline zeolite must be uniformly and regularly shaped and have a size which allows all the adsorbed molecules access to adsorption sites in the interior ne crystal without permitting the entrance or passage of molecules of any undesirable size. The term "molecular sieve" thus defines a specific class of materials having uniform pore nings which allow only molecules of a certain size and certain configurations to be adsorbed and isolated or separated from other molecules of the same size and configuration. The term thesis of zeolite" as used herein means a process in which a crystalline zeolite is formed and consists of heating a reactive source of silica or silica and alumina in an organic directing nt until the resulting product is in an amorphous form. The presence of a directing agent has been found to promote the speed of conversion of the amorphous material to crystalline ite. The term "molecular sieve" is often applied to a crystalline zeolite material which has a silica to alumina ratio of about 3.0 or greater but which can be derived from
